

One year ago I purchased a subscription to XM satellite radio, skeptical of paying for radio service. Over the past year it has become more and more valuable to me and XM has rewarded it's members by adding stations. XM provides stations that focus on a wide range of topics and interests. The whole point of satellite radio is that it's a GLOBAL resource - I could listen to this radio anywhere in the world. And I view it's programming a global matter as well, including the weather and traffic information. Don't punish XM for boldly succeeding in what was initially a questionable market, and don't punish XM's supporters by limiting the content XM can provide.
